 Short Story of the Day.

JIMMY AND JANE.

From the Waverley Magazine. Those were their names-Jimmy and Jane. Everybody in the village knew them; they had many friends; yet all agreed with wonderful unanimity that they were two of the strangest individuals ever seen. Jimmy-his full name was James Brad-ford-was a bachelor of about 50 years.

reputed to have a stocking full of gold and silver coins, which he kept in his feather bed. He was a noted hater of women, and seldom spoke to one.

Jane-or more properly Miss Jane Green-was called an old maid, lived in a tiny house by herself, and had a holy horror of the biped man. Her age was "uncertain," but her 40th birthday was of the past.

but her 40th birthday was of the past.

Jimmy took life easily, but was opposed to ostentation and the modern acceptance of the term "luxury."

He dressed without regard to fashlon, but within the bounds of respectability. He even rode out in his own carriage, but it was by no means a modern vehicle: it had done service, he would proudly tell you, since his grandfather's days, quite a century ago, He cared little for books; society he abominated, because it was spoiled by admitting women, and of the few diversions that went to make up the sum of his life's pleasures, fishing held the place of prominence.

that went to make up the sum of his life's pleasures, fishing heid the place of prominence.

Even in the pursuit of this gratification Jimmy was not free from harassment, for he was obliged to pass by the door of a cottage occupied by a woman in order to reach the river. The woman was no other than Jane.

One bright afternoon in September, Jimmy was iounging along the river bank when the splash of oars in midstream fell upon his ears. He looked in the direction of the sounds, and then a scowl wrinkled his forehead.

"Humph!" he muttered, "that old maid, Jane Green, is trying to row over to Ned Brown's. She'd better be to home, drinkin' tea. Most likely she'll manage to get drowned. What a fuss she makes, splashin' an' flappin' about."

He pulled up his line with an angry jerk, put a fresh worm on the hook, and then cast out the line again, with an outlay of strength quite unnecessary, unless to give vent to his indignation.

The "splashin' an' flappin' about," instead of dying away in the distance as the boat neared the other side of the river, grew louder and more disturbing, and half in wonder, half anger, Jimmy looked around again.

"Drat the luck!" he cried. "If she ain't wonder, half anger, Jimmy looked around again.

"Drat the luck!" he cried. "If she ain't gone an' rowed right smack inter that eddy—the only one within two miles at that. If that ain't jest like a fool woman I'd like to know what 'tis like."

Just then his attention was attracted to his line, and Jane's peril was for a moment forgotten.

A forcible reminder came in the form of a loud, piercing scream, followed by a frightened appeal for help.

"There, jest as might ha' been expected! The first bite I've had for an hour, an' that miser'ble woman had to let out a screech an' scare the fish away."

"Help! Help! I shall drown!" screamed the woman.

screech an' scare the fish away."

"Help! Help! I shall drown!" screamed the woman.

There was no question about it, Miss Jane was in great peril. Her boat, an old leaky shell—was twirling about, the rapid rotary motion causing at frequent intervals foamy waves to splash over its sides, and it bade fair to sink in short order.

"Let her drown!" growled the woman-hater savagely. "There'll be one less woman-magest! she will go down as sure as fate. Bein' a sort of hui am critter, I spose I'll her to pull her out, er the neighbors' lynch me."

His own boat happened to be near at hand, and a few rapid strokes brought him as near the eddy as safety permitted.

"Here!" cried he, grumbling, as he threw out a rope, "ketch hold of that, if you don't want to drown."

Miss Jane had been so occupied with her fears and siruggles that up to this moment she was unaware that assistance had arrived. At the sound of his voice she turned quickly.

Her hasty movement caused the boat to go down, but she clump herolcally to the oars and regarded her would-be rescuer with a look of horror.

"Merciful powers! Jimmy Bradford, of all men! lemme drown!"

"Don't be a tarmation fool, Jane Green! Ketch hold of that rope an' I'll pull you out."

"Never!" cried Jane, spurting out a stream of water from her mouth and padding desperately with both hands to keep affoat.

"Then I'll pull ye out, anyhow!" ejaculated Jimmy. "I never knew any livin' woman had such grit. You're too plucky a way, but staggered and was obliged to grasp a branch of a tree for support.

"She arose, trembling and weak, and attempted to walk away, but staggered and was obliged to grasp a branch of a tree for support.

stream of water from her mouth and padding desperately with both hands to keep afloat.

"Then I'll pull ye out, anyhow!" ejaculated Jimmy. "I never knew any livin' woman had such grit. You're too plucky for fish bait, an' I'll save ye, whether er no."

Despite Jane's gurgled protests, he hurriedly hauled in the rope, formed a slipnoose at one end, and hurled it over the half drowned woman's shoulders. Then be exerted his strength in a vigorous pull, which Jane resisted with all her waning powers, and succeeded in lifting her into the boat.

"Oh, dear!" she gasped. "And to think that I should owe my life to Jimmy Bradford," and then, too much exhausted to bear up longer, she closed her eyes and fainted away.

"Wuss an' wuss!" cried Jimmy, "Did ever a man hev such luck? What in the world am I goin' to do with a faintin', half-drowned woman. I'd like to know! I've half a mind to leave her here in the boat an' start for home."

But he didn't. He did precisely the opposite.

He drew the boat up on the sloping shore, and after carrying Miss Jane to a sheltered spot beneath a widespreading willow tree, proceeded to restore her to consclousness. When she opened her eyes the first thing that met her gaze was Jimmy's face.

"Oh, my soul!" she gasped, feebly. "Am I in the power of the Evil One?"

"Draw it a little mild, Jane Green. Jain't the Evil One, nor no kin to him, as I knows on. An' you're showin' mighty little appreciation for havin' your life saved, can tell ye."
